Air transport and the European Union

The last fifteen years have seen an ever-increasing expansion of air traffic. However, air transport was left until recently almost untouched by European integration and, in particular, by the rules on competition, the backbone of the EC Treaty. The building up of a common air transport policy of the Community was accelerated with the Council adopting the second and the third package in 1991 and 1992, respectively. On 1 January 1993, we entered a period of far reaching free competition between the European airlines.
