Building on the fundamental questions surrounding the origins of human beings developed in his book, Feral Species, Charles Orange explores new ground in his quest to explain why it is probable that modern humans are the end result of extraterrestrial genetic experimentation. In Feral Species 2: Civilization, Orange analyzes issues mainstream anthropologists continue to ignore and overlook. Challenging all conventional theories for the inexplicable development of what he calls a radical new species, Orange presents a logical basis for a new view behind the development of Homo sapiens. FS2 advances a fresh model for conceptualizing the origin question not based solely on myths, legends, and archeology, but rather using logic and science to make startling new hypotheses not only with regard to our species but also those claimed by Orange to be most likely to have seeded humanity nearly 200,000 years ago.
